Women stenographers are always wo

Already half o dozen of the prettlest young women employed in the general office have given up their positions, and the resignations of many others are expected to follow this week. The reason for the sudden ruling against woployees is not due, as it would be natural to infer, to hatred of the sex engendered by the miting of some managers unite in saying that it is a pleasant thing to have a pretty, well-dressed young woman about, even during business hours. The wherefore of the seemingly unjust discrimination against the girl stenographers is found in the pension system of the railroad. For its officials claim that a woman stenagrapher can never be anything else, and is not fitted for promotion under the civil-service rules in force under the pension system.

Thousands of stenographers all over

America will ridicule this statement, and in New York scores of successful women in the different branches of business life disprove it dully. Of course, the young women say when a girl takes up stenography, she does not often drop it to study law or medicine, or become

Just Like Men.

They declare that neither does the man stenographer, if he is competent, regard his profession as merely a stepping stone to another. It is a far cry, they say from the girl graduate of a ercial school, who takes dictation at from $5 to $8 a week to the experinced, fully qualified woman who, as private secretary, has entire charge of a business man's correspondence, or is place at the head of his stenographic orce, at a salary of $2,500 a year.

In discussing the action of the railroad with an Evening World reporter yester- a true Irih grace. day, Mrs. Anna Hill Fletcher, who conducts the typewriting office in the Temple Court Building established more woman stenographer in New York season he laid in a stock of pretty gold to go into business for herself, said:

position, involving great nervous strain, will sometimes go o ffon and get drunk, leaving his employer in a lurch. A moman, of course, never does that, and if sine feels that she is on her honor, is just as careful of her employers' secrets as a man could be.

Charge Is Untrue.

The railroads say that women stenographers unless they get married, the inference being that they end their business careers where they began them. This is unitrue. There are, of course some ourn, girls who enter the profession merely to carn money enough to buy pretty clothes, who have no thought of advancing, and who marry at the first opportunity. But his number is growing less every year. There are many siris nowadays carning anywhere from from herore scarling their liberty for a man whose salary would probably not exceed theirs. Nowadays the woman stenographer takes up stenography as a life business.
